

One of Ours (Large Print): (Winner 1923 Pulitzer Prize) (Willa Cather Masterpiece Collection)

Claude Wheeler opened his eyes before the sun was up and vigorously shook his younger brother, who lay in the other half of the same bed. Ralph, Ralph, get awake! Come down and help me wash the car. What for? Why, aren't we going to the circus today? Cars all right. Let me alone. The boy turned over and pulled the sheet up to his face, to shut out the light which was beginning to come through the curtainless windows. Claude rose and dressed, a simple operation which took very little time. He crept down two flights of stairs, feeling his way in the dusk, his red hair standing up in peaks, like a cocks comb. He went through the kitchen into the adjoining washroom, which held two porcelain stands with running water. Everybody had washed before going to bed, apparently, and the bowls were ringed with a dark sediment which the hard, alkaline water had not dissolved. Shutting the door on this disorder, he turned back to the kitchen, took Mahaileys tin basin, doused his face and head in cold water, and began to plaster down his wet hair. Old Mahailey herself came in from the yard, with her apron full of corn-cobs to start a fire in the kitchen stove. She smiled at him in the foolish fond way she often had with him when they were alone. What air you gittin up for a-ready, boy? You goin to the circus before breakfast? Dont you make no noise, else youll have em all down here before I git my fire a-goin.
