Did you ever get anything for yourself? Anna inquired of him. O, yes, maam; many a time. What was the last thing you got for yourself? Some new runners for the jars. If you please to look, maam, this here is a new pattern quite. If you had a great deal of money, what would you do with it? I would belong to the Mechanics Institution, and learn to draw; and then I might get the prize,--a good many guineas. And what would you do with those guineas,--help your mother, or marry a wife, or what I I would get some marble to cut. Marble is very dear, they say; but I saw a good many marble things in the British Museum. Le Brocq, always ready with a word against Durell, wished he had taken the boy anywhere but to the British Museum, if he must meddle with him at all. He had heard the proper place to take boys to for a holiday was Sadlers Wells. If he had gone there, Brennan would have had no extravagant notions about getting marble, or anything else that would come in the way of his being a good potter; and he reminded Brennan that the Scripture told of a potter at the wheel. Anna looked at the jar before her, and wondered whether it would have been produced if the boy had been taken to Sadlers Wells instead of the British Museum. You had better be a journeyman potter, boy, said Le Brocq. You may make money by informing against your master, if you watch him closely enough. Brennan coloured indignantly, and only said he should like to cut things in marble, because the excise had nothing to do wi...
