

Silas Marner by George Eliot

De Capitulo I.: En los tiempos en que las rucas zumbaban activamente en las granjas, en que las mismas grandes damas, vestidas de sedas y encajes, tenian sus pequenas rucas de encina lustrada, a veces se veia, ya sea en los caminos de los distritos apartados, ya sea en el seno profundo de las colinas, a ciertos hombres palidos y enclenques que, comparados con las gentes vigorosas de los campos, parecian ser los ultimos vestigios de una raza desheredada. El perro del pastor ladraba furioso cuando uno de esos hombres de fisonomia extrana aparecia en las alturas, y su fisonomia extrana se destacaba negra sobre el cielo, en el ocaso breve del sol de invierno; porque, ¿a que perro no incomoda una persona encorvada bajo el peso de un fardo? Y aquellos hombres palidos rara vez salian de su aldea sin aquella carga misteriosa. El propio pastor, bien que tuviera buenas razones para creer que la bolsa solo contenia hilo de lino, si no largas piezas de lienzo tejidas con ese hilo, no estaba muy seguro de que aquel oficio de tejedor, por indispensable que fuera, pudiera ejercerse sin el auxilio del espiritu maligno. En aquella epoca remota, la supersticion acompanaba a todo individuo o a todo hecho un tanto extrano. Y para que una cosa pareciera tal, bastaba que se repitiera periodica o accidentalmente, como las visitas del buhonero o del afilador. Nadie sabia donde vivian aquellos hombres errantes, ni de quien descendian; y, ¿como podria decirse quienes eran, a menos de conocer a alguien que supiera quienes eran su padre y su madre? Para los campesinos de antano, el mundo, mas alla del horizonte de su experiencia personal, era una region vaga y misteriosa. Para su pensamiento, que se habia quedado estacionario, una vida nomada era una concepcion tan oscura como la existencia, durante el invierno, de las golondrinas que volvian en primavera. Pero el extranero que se establecia definitivamente entre ellos, si procedia de una region lejana, no dejaba nunca de ser mirado con un resto de desconfianza. Esta circunstancia hubiera hecho que las gentes no se sorprendieran absolutamente, en el caso de que cometiera un crimen despues de largos anos de conducta inofensiva, particularmente si tenia cierta reputacion de instruido, o si demostraba cierta habilidad en un oficio.
