Not illustrated. 1875 Excerpt: ...and Clement reconnoitring at the window, said, Mr. Milwright--the Rector of Ewford--no doubt it is about the Archaeology. A friend of yours? Not particularly. I sat next him at the Visitation, and as the Charge ended, he touched me and said, Ill show you the only bit of fourteenth-century glass in the choir f and when we came out, and he heard my name, he said, I congratulate you on the possession of the finest specimen of Cistercian architecture in the rural deanery. Im afraid he minds his ecclesiology more than his ecclesia. By this time the entrance was effected of a lively well-bred man of middle age, not at all the conventional antiquarian, though still with one master idea. He apologized for his early call, but explained his purpose, namely to ask permission to conduct a party of the archaeologists over the Church and Priory, and to make a preliminary inspection at once, to compare his old notes and prepare fresh ones. They were both willingly granted; and Felix went to summon his sisters, who would gladly profit by the primary survey without a crowd, and be delighted to learn the traditions of the place, which were necessarily a good deal lost to them. When the pair under the cedar looked round on hearing voices, Robina exclaimed with surprise and recognition of the guest. How do you know him? asked her companion. He was staying at the Towers last winter. He was once a curate at Repworth. Will he know you? Not so likely as if he had seen me as a brass; but I must go and speak to him. Such an enchanting encounter in your exile! Nonsense! I only dont choose to seem ashamed of my vocation, she answered rather proudly, as she came forward to join the party, for
