Not illustrated. 1836 Excerpt: ...wanteth oil. They are always oily, and so open easily and quickly to those who knock at them. Hence you read, that he that dwells in this house gives freely, loves freely, and doth us good with all his heart. Yea, saith he, / will rejoice over them to do them good, and I-will plant them in this land assuredly with my whole heart, and with my whole soul. Wherefore the oil of grace, signified by this oily tree, or these olive posts, on which these doors do hang, causes that they open glibly, or frankly to the soul. XXIX. What tite Doors of the Temple were made of. 1. The doors of the temple were made of fir, that is so sweet-scented and pleasant to the smell. 2. Mankind is also often compared to the fir tree, as Isa. xli. 19. 3. Now since the doors of the temple were made of the same, doth it not show, that the way into Gods house, and into his favour, is by the same nature which they are of, that thither enter, even through the vail his flesh? Heb. x. For this door, I mean the antitype, doth even say of himself, lam as a green fir tree, from me is thy fruit found. 4. This fir tree, is Christ, Christ as man, and so as the way to the Father. The doors of the temple arc also as you see here, made of the fir tree: even of that tree which was a type of the humanity of Jesus Christ. 5. The fir tree is also the house of the stork, that unclean bird, even as Christ is the harbour and shelter for sinners. As for the stork, saith the text, the fir tree is her house: and Christ saith to the sinners that see their want of shelter, Come unto me, and I will give you rest. He is a refuge for the oppressed, a refuge in time of trouble. He is, as the doors of fir of the temple, the inlet to Gods house, to Gods presence, and to a partaking of his glory. Thus God did of old...
