Excerpt: ... HOW THEY TOOK THE GREAT GALLEON. When captains courageous, whom death could not daunt, Did march to the siege of the city of Gaunt, They musterd their soldiers by two and by three, But the foremost in battle was Mary Ambree. When brave Sir John Major was slain in her sight, Who was her true lover, her joy and delight, Because he was murtherd most treacherouslie, Then vovd to avenge him fair Mary Ambree. Old Ballad. A.d. 1584. One more glance at the golden tropic sea, and the golden tropic evenings, by the shore of New Granada, in the golden Spanish Main. The bay of Santa Martha is rippling before the land-breeze, one sheet of living flame. The mighty forests are sparkling with myriad fire-flies. The lazy mist which lounges round the inner hills shines golden in the sunset rays; and, nineteen thousand feet aloft, the mighty peak of Horqueta cleaves the abyss of air, rose-red against the dark-blue vault of heaven. The rosy cone fades to a dull leaden hue; but only for awhile. The stars flash out one by one, and Venus, like another moon, tinges the eastern snows with gold, and sheds across the bay a long yellow line of rippling light Everywhere is glory and richness. What wonder if the earth in that enchanted land be as rich to her inmost depths as she is upon the surface 1 The heaven, the hills, the sea, are one sparkling garland of jewels --what wonder if the soil be jewelled also 1 if every water-course and bank of earth be spangled with emeralds and rubies, with grains of gold, and feathered wreaths of native silver? So thought, in a poetic mood, the Bishop of Cartagena, as he sat in the state cabin of that great galleon, The City of the True Cross, and looked pensively out of the window towards the shore. The good man was in a state of holy calm...
